There are just too many, that even the journalists can't keep up with them.
But just who would pay attention to those? The world is only interested in the news it wants to hear.
The massacres that weren't covered were archived as webpages.

The most efficient way to stop these massacres is for Washington to set targets on the most hazardous of the upper class, and then we the head hunting squad, take care of them
We've been doing this for two years!

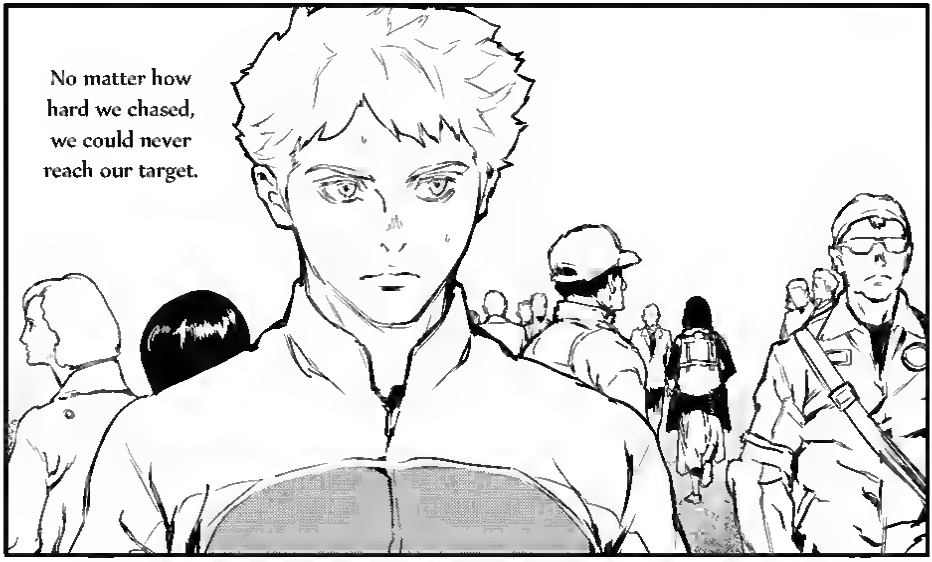
There were so many missions and so many targets

as we continued our mission, almost all of our operations' orders started to have the same name.
And yet--

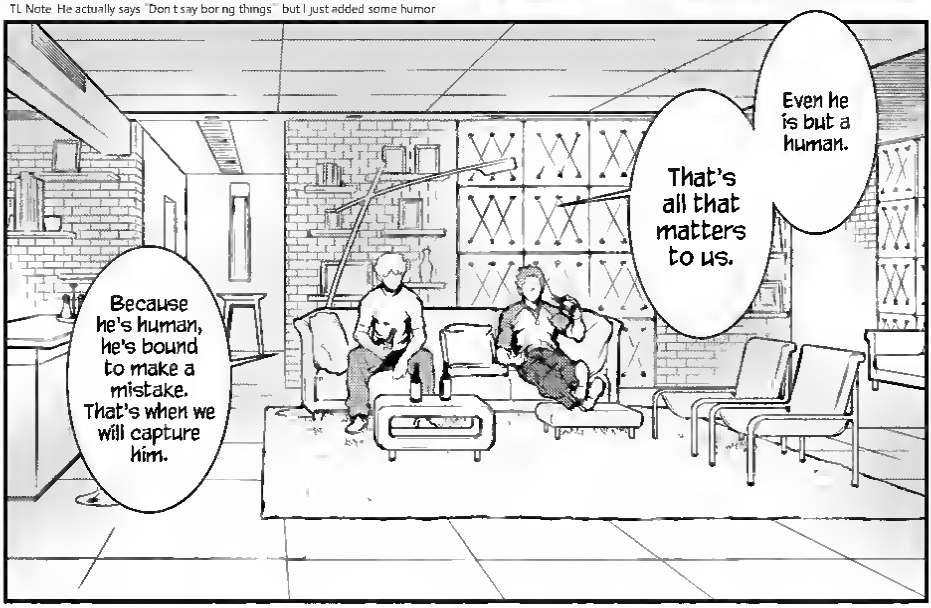


No matter how hard we chased, we could never reach our target.

Two years ago—
That man was acting as the "Culture and Information Secretary" for an armed group during a European country's civil war.
He's always a step ahead of us.. He's almost like a tourist traveling from civil war to civil war.
That man has continued to elude us ever since then—

Just who is John Paul,
the American targeted by the U.S. government?
A runaway who, instead of an arrest warrant, received a death warrant by his own countrymen.
A tourist whose sight sees genocides and piles of dead bodies.
Just what is John Paul's identity?

TL Note: He actually says "Don t say bor ng things" but I just added some humor



Even he is but a human.
That's all that matters to us.
Because he's human, he's bound to make a mistake. That's when we will capture him.

And then we... kill him.
I had a dream about Alex this morning.

Clavis, you...
Well, that's only natural.
You did shoot your own teammate.
Your actions weren't seen as incriminating.
Even if they say, "There was a mistake in Lieutenant Alex's emotional adjustment prior to the mission," there's no way we can just accept that.

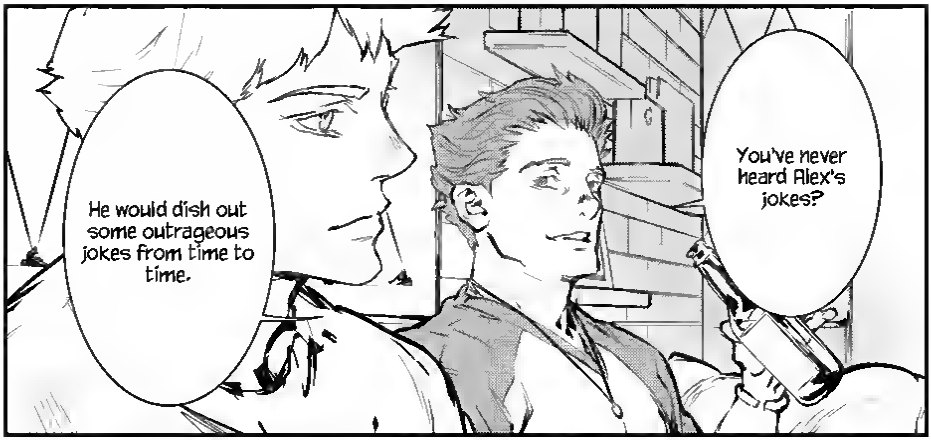
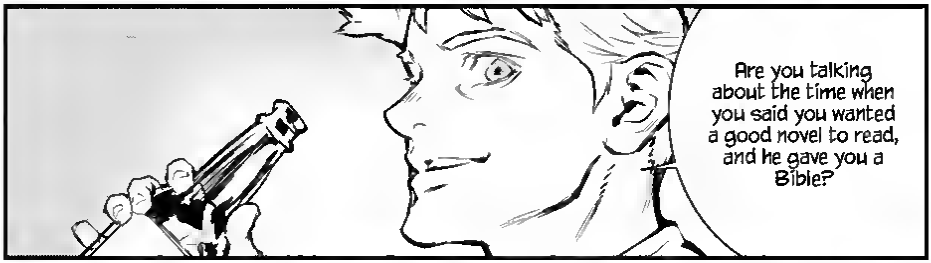
I feel like I've only ever talked about God with Alex...
I'm from the standpoint that God doesn't exist,
and yet, he never tried to drag me into religion.
We respected each other's beliefs and debated about God, hell, and sin.
I enjoyed those dumb jokes of his, too.
Dumb jokes?



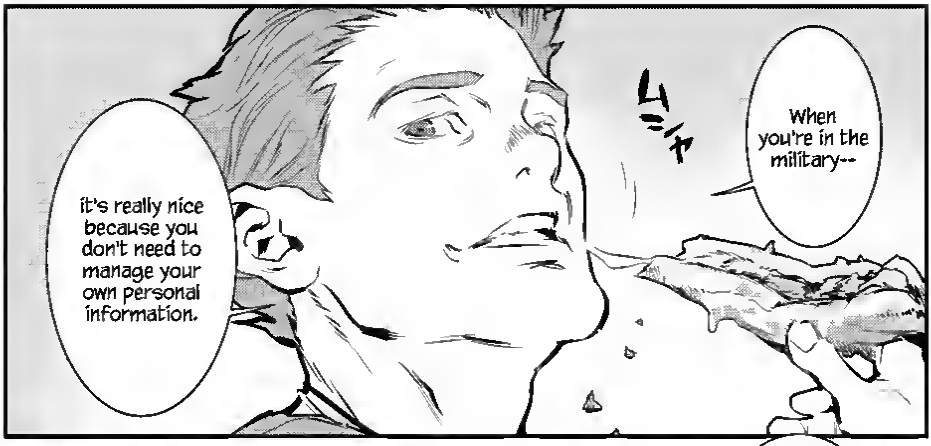
He would dish out some outrageous jokes from time to time.
You've never heard Alex's jokes?

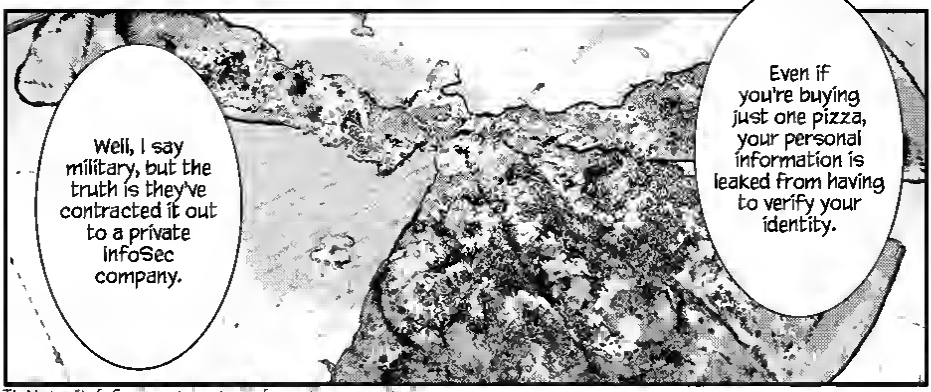


Are you talking about the time when you said you wanted a good novel to read, and he gave you a Bible?

Leland and I really liked his jokes that made fun of how selfish God was in the Old Testament.
I'm talking about his jokes that made fun of the Catholic stereotypes, or the Pope.
No, I'm not talking about that.

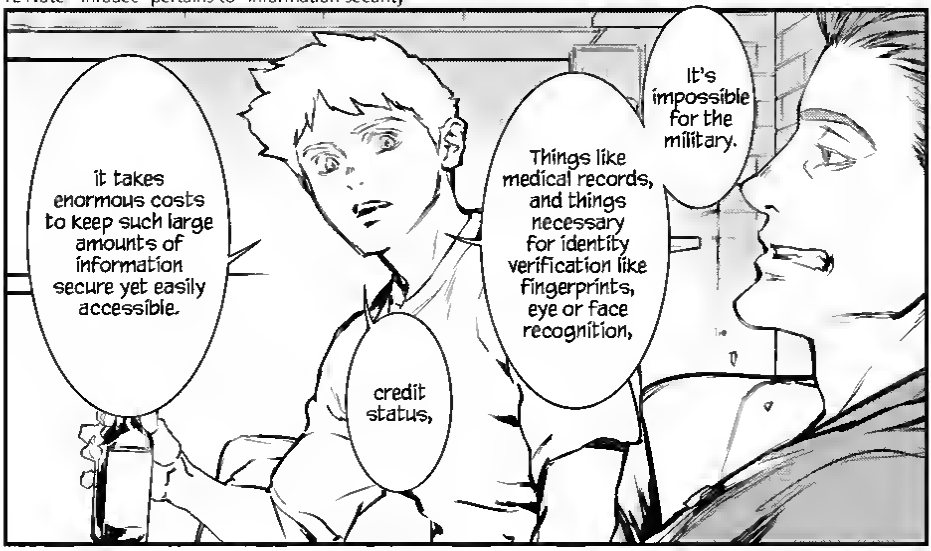
I've...
joked around with him like that.
Jokes don't really get through to you,
so Alex must have been trying to be considerate.
Just why are you here at my place on your day off, Williams?
Why don't you spend it with your wife?
Having pizza ordered to my house...





Even if you're buying just one pizza, your personal information is leaked from having to verify your identity.
Well, I say military, but the truth is they've contracted it out to a private InfoSec company.

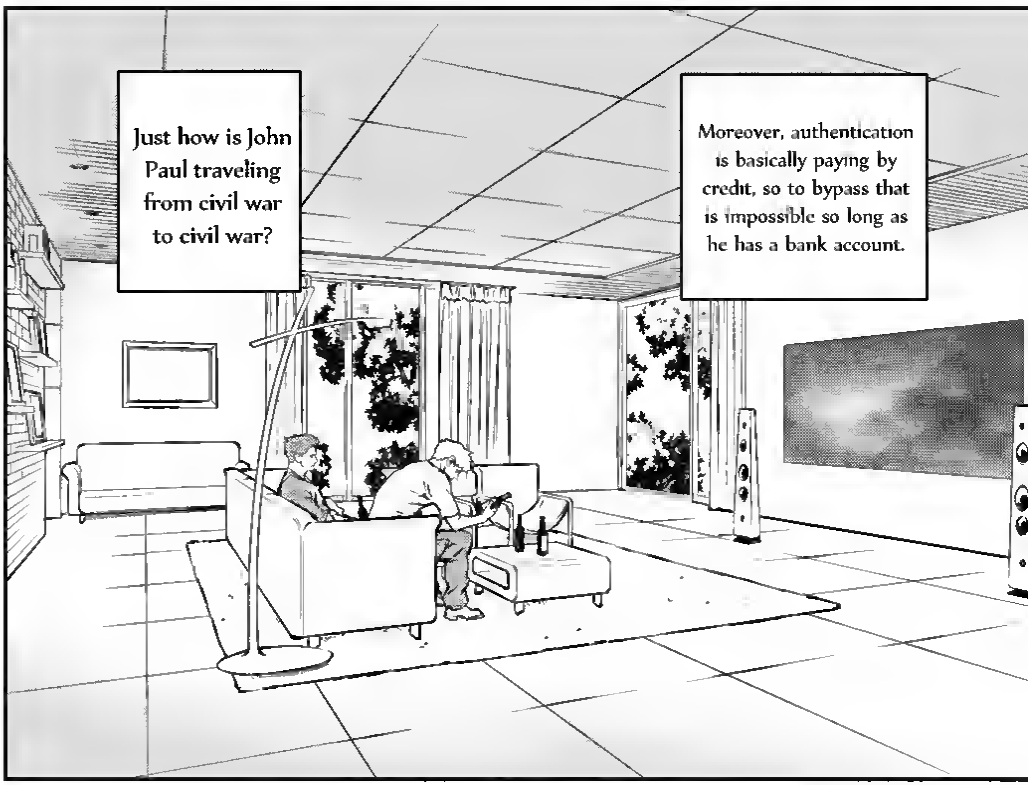
TL Note: "InfoSec" pertains to information security



It's impossible for the military.
Things like medical records, and things necessary for identity verification like fingerprints, eye or face recognition,
credit status,
it takes enormous costs to keep such large amounts of information secure yet easily accessible.

Hey...
About that John Paul, just how is he bypassing all these identify verification systems?
John Paul has gone from Europe to Africa, Africa to Asia, all without leaving a record.
You need fingerprint authentication to get even a piece of jalapeño in your pizza.
When I was ten, we only needed to sign, but nowadays, wherever you go, they need a finger-print or an eye or face scan.

You also need authentication when buying an airplane ticket.
That's true...



Just how is John Paul traveling from civil war to civil war?
Moreover, authentication is basically paying by credit, so to bypass that is impossible so long as he has a bank account.

yes, I'm with him.
Yes,

Yes,
yes, right away...

I understand. We'll be there within an hour.

What is it?

We've been summoned.
